About the Artist

I was born and bred in Wellington and moved to Hawkes Bay seven years ago.

I have been a stay-at-home mum to my three beautiful children for the last eight years and I felt I needed a creative outlet to provide some downtime so I looked at trying some form or another of art.

I have always lived near beaches and spent holidays along many coastlines in New Zealand and around the world.

For me the ocean is my place of sanctuary and where I am my happiest, so it was only natural that this would come through me as a form of artistic expression. Working with resin and alcohol ink gives me the flexibility as an artist to create the effect of flowing or crashing water.

There is something about water that draws us to it and Oceanic Art for me is also a symbol of change and cleansing - an accurate reflection of our current climate.

I have sold my pieces thanks to the benefits of social media but I love being able to display my artwork as I believe resin is even more stunning when seen up close in person. I have been told by my clients that my artwork is a 'real talking point' when displayed in their living areas and I love nothing more than seeing my art enjoyed in their homes or as gifts.

I hope to branch out in the future to create resin sculptures and work with New Zealand native timbers and resin together.
